ANNONCES IMPORTANTES

L'Agence du revenu du Canada accepte désormais les demandes de Subvention d'urgence du Canada pour le loyer

Le Plan d'intervention économique du Canada pour répondre à la COVID-19 a contribué à soutenir des millions de travailleurs canadiens et d'entreprises depuis le début de la pandémie. Grâce à la Subvention d'urgence du Canada pour le loyer (SUCL), le gouvernement offre un soutien ciblé et direct aux entreprises, aux organismes sans but lucratif et aux organismes de bienfaisance qui continuent de faire face aux répercussions économiques de la pandémie de COVID-19.

Prolongation de la fermeture des salles de spectacles : Des effets délétères à long terme pour l'industrie de la musique

Plus la fermeture d'une industrie se prolonge, plus les effets délétères qu'elle induit pour cette dernière se feront sentir à long terme. L'ADISQ, qui vient de procéder à une vaste consultation auprès de ses membres, note que le milieu de la musique dans son ensemble subit une pression considérable depuis plusieurs mois. Une crainte est partagée par l'ensemble du milieu : l'année 2021 sera encore plus éprouvante que celle qui se termine.

La musique à l'heure de la réalité étendue

Le lundi 25 juin 2020, John Legend crée l'événement en s'associant à la société de réalité virtuelle Wave XR pour proposer un concert virtualisé en livestream à ses fans. Le développement récent des technologies de réalité étendue (XR), à savoir la réalité virtuelle (VR), la réalité augmentée (AR) et la réalité mixte (MR), a ouvert l'horizon des possibles dans la musique, encore faut-il pouvoir mesurer les conséquences de son essor sur le long terme.

Warner is signing double the number of artists via AI-driven A&R tool Sodatone than it did last year. Now, it's hired a global head of data science.

Within that discussion, Cooper dropped the following piece of information: "Since January, on a year-over-year basis, we've doubled the number of new artist and songwriter signings identified through our proprietary A&R app, Sodatone." Or to put it another way, in the year of Covid lockdown, Warner Music Group is signing 100% more new artists via its artificial intelligence-driven A&R scouting tool than it did in 2019.

Why Do We Even Listen to New Music?

Listening to new music is hard. Not hard compared to going to space or war, but hard compared to listening to music we already know. I assume most Americans—especially those who have settled into the groove of life after 30—simply don't listen to new music because it's easy to forgo the act of discovery when work, rent, children, and broadly speaking "life" comes into play. Eventually, we bow our heads and cross a threshold where most music becomes something to remember rather than something to experience. And now, on top of everything else, here we all are, crawling through this tar pit of panic and dread, trying to heft some new music through historic gravity into our lives.

Spotify has 300 million users. It wants more of them to listen to podcasts.

“Our goal is to get people into the habit of listening to content on Spotify that’s not music,” Polgreen said. While the growth of podcasts has been strong, it’s still a tiny fraction of overall listening for the service. She pointed to the latest Edison research that podcasting hit an all-time high in 2020, now accounting for a 6 percent share of audio consumption in the United States.

Arts Taskforce Recommends Basic Income of €325 for Artists and Event Workers

At the press conference to launch the report yesterday (18 November), Minister Martin said she had presented the report and its recommendations to government and she will now set up an oversight group to examine the recommendations. She is a strong advocate of the UBI and had negotiated a trial of the idea into the Programme for Government which was published in June. The Minister also said that cabinet colleagues had been 'very supportive' and she will be advocating the scheme with 'urgency'. The task-force recommends that the scheme should start in 2021.

Indoor and outdoor performance venues can reach up to 50% capacity in the first step, and then 75%, in states with no new locally acquired coronavirus cases in 14 days.

Why are so many artists selling off their song catalogues to faceless companies?

Word came down last week that The Killers, one of the most successful bands of the 21st century, had sold the rights to every song they'd written prior to 2020 to a company called Eldridge Industries. The purchase price wasn't disclosed, but having sold 30 million albums, the number must have been very, very high. This comes on the heels of a deal made by Imagine Dragons back in the summer. They sold their entire publishing catalogue — including the rights to songs like Radioactive, Believer, and Whatever It Takes — to Concord Music Publishing. The price tag? Somewhere around US$100 million. One. Hundred. MILLION. Dollars.

12 Thoughts on the 2021 Grammy Nominations

The full list of nominations for the 63rd annual Grammys has arrived. The 2021 awards bring a few changes—the “Urban Contemporary” category is now “Progressive R&B,” “Best Rap/Sung Performance” has changed to “Best Melodic Rap Performance,” and “World Music” is now “Global Music”—as the Recording Academy tries to up its diversity efforts following last year’s cataclysmic leadership breakup. Replacing Alicia Keys after two consecutive years as host will be The Daily Show’s Trevor Noah. But much remains the same: Beyoncé leads the nominees, plenty of people are up in arms about perceived snubs, and, as ever, we have thoughts.

Country's Songwriters Grapple With Alcohol's Abundance

Country fans might not see all the world through “Whiskey Glasses,” but they’re definitely hearing it through alcoholic earbuds. The 2019 Morgan Wallen hit “Whiskey Glasses” brought songwriter Ben Burgess the BMI country song of the year title on Nov. 9, and the Country Airplay chart dated Nov. 24 reveals a format that remains whiskey bent, if not hellbound. Seven of the songs on that list — including HARDY’s “One Beer” (No. 5), Lady A’s “Champagne Night” (No. 12) and Kelsea Ballerini’s “Hole in the Bottle” (No. 14) — posit an alcohol reference boldly in the title.
